Dulles Denies CIA Role In Algiers Rebellion

Chicago Daily News Service

Allen W. Dulles, director of the Central Intelligence Agency, allowed himself to be quoted yesterday in denial of reports that CIA agents were implicated in the revolt of the French generals in Algeria. Departing from his usual practice of maintaining strict silence in the face of reports and rumors about CIA activity, Dulles said through an agency spokesman: "The reports are completely false. The CIA had nothing to do with the rebellion." The CIA spokesman added that the false reports had been circulated by rightwingers in France. (This also was reported by the Chicago Daily News Service and other news dispatches.)
